// Prolonged Field Care

Our civilian expedition or field work emphasis Prolonged field Care specific course is the first of its kind in the UK, possibly globally. We have been working with an internationally renowned UK University on Prolonged Field Care research. The course is part of a PhD, first of its kind, multi-agency study.

The course is a Foundation Level introduction to the subject and is intended for backpack based expeditions with limited medical equipment rather than a field hospital or fully equipped military unit

The R2Ri team are experienced remote area medics. The team includes those experienced in Prolonged Field Care from both military and civilian operations - whether terrestrial or ship board PFC experience, prolonged evacuations and more. The team also includes University lecturers and academics. We have combined the expertise of team members with Masters Degrees focusing on Prolonged Field and Nursing Care (now undertaking PhD's in Prolonged Field Care), with military and civilian experience.

We have an unparalleled Faculty in the UK to deliver PFC training: Ex British Antarctic Survey Doctor, Military Doctor, Experienced Remote Area Paramedics, Military Medics, Military Nurses, two Nursing Lecturers (University degree lecturers), Off Shore Medics, Telemedicine and Repatriation expert Doctors.

What is Prolonged Field Care?

It is NOT simply care in the field - e.g. hygiene, proactive first aid application/ prevention/awareness of associated conditions arising due to time in the field.

'Prolonged Field Care is field medical care applied beyond doctrinal planning timelines until the patient can be delivered to definitive care. PFC is not a defined set of skills or a phase of care. PFC is an operational problem. COL Sean Keenan, a former US Special Forces Group Surgeon, put it "a really [bad] situation to be in". Prolonged Field Care is "taking care of a patient who you know needs to be somewhere else for much longer than you are comfortable with." ...'

In a civilian context, our patient is ill or injured, we are some time/distance away from help and we need to get them to help or get help to us. Assistance is not coming any time soon. PFC fills the gap between our incident response to safe handover. We have to do what we can, with what we have available. How do we do this? PFC starts where traditional Pre-Hospital Care/First Aid training stops.

The course very much complements and is intended for those who have undertaken or are about to undertake remote area medical training with us. As a guide, the course is suitable for Health Care Professionals with remote area medical training and non HCP's at FREC 4 or our Remote Medical Responder : A Wilderness First Responder 7 day course.

Medics and non-medics will attend lectures that will be delivered in plain English. Clearly, medics will be able to engage at a higher level. It is important to operate within scope and remit.

Both are designed to rapidly introduce delegates to this subject, provide a real-world hands-on scenario and allow the delegates to go away from the course, well equipped to consider how they can improve their performance on the next occasion and prepare for a real-life PFC scenario.

Course content:

The course will take delegates through a systematic approach to PFC including with memorable Mnemonics - assisted by our field proof flow charts and aide memoires.

Delegates will also be taught a series of skills - relevant to their skills levels - to enable them to implement PFC in the field and introduced to lightweight, real world kit, that you would have with you on expedition/ in the field.

Course format:

The course is run over two days, at the National Outdoor Centre, Plas y Brenin. There is no pre reading. Format includes lectures and skill stations, introducing delegates to a formula to undertake Prolonged Field Care post incident and to practice these skills as well as gain experience in a friendly, supportive environment - culminating in an overnight exercise, treating, monitoring and caring for the patient in an outdoor setting, with minimal (expedition typical only kit), utilising telemedicine and more. The exercise culminates in an evacuation to a Helicopter Landing Site.

The practical phase of the course is intended to conclude before lunch time of day 2, followed by hot showers, time for lunch and then a debrief before finalising any course topics.

The course is complemented by post course resources including wipe clean, PFC specific field aide memoires.

The Medic and Non-Medic courses are run at the same time, in the same forum but catering for different levels of content/skill/knowledge.

Content is subject to change

Faculty:

A broad Faculty of operational Remote Area Medics will deliver the course. We have a specific PFC Faculty within our wider Faculty. PFC Faculty details will be circulated nearer the time as all of the Faculty are operational Medics and we have to account for operational deployment. It is intended that the course delivery staff will include Doctors, Paramedic and those with experience as military medics. All are existing members of our Faculty.

The Faculty will include those with experience working in remote areas as medics for both long and short deployments ± and with experience in delivering Prolonged Field Care.

As well as our real-world expertise, delegates come on our courses for the quality and experience of our Faculty.

Group discussion is encouraged and expected. This is a supportive forum in which to exchange ideas and experiences. Prolonged Field Care is in its infancy and we are equally keen to hear your experiences, tips and tricks.

A red arrow pointing to the right, with a grey shadow behind it.

We reserve the right to change any aspect of the course to ensure effective health and safety.
